I. drag the word's unsonned husk into bloody puddle let yourself your eyes adjust to a story un –bodied from spit with force then call it give it an old name that dribbles down the chin slather the word with itself to trace the slicked outline of a gesture you've never known and are no where closer to reaching beckon the word closer toward its maligned meaning beckon and it will come forth a thrush of thrush

a pale cartography beckon and it will come as you
as you again yourself as I again you

[You step into the cave wall to know what it's made of.]

[I step into your body and come no closer to learning to speak it.]

[The skeleton steps into my body and becomes a word loosed from language.]

[You step into your own body and find only another cave.]

[I eat oatmeal.]

[You find the skeleton of a word and rattle it til the bones are in the oatmeal. The skeleton sounds like a drum, or a cave avalanching its mouth.]

[I eat the bones of a word and come no closer to learning to speak it.]

Skeleton: Can I have some oatmeal?
I reach it again
The cow: again?
You: I missed the word
I: I know
You: what was it I: it goned the body and then became one
You: can we fix it I: state farm doesn't do word insurance
You: how do you fix a word I: if we knew we wouldn't be here
You: again?
